Waterbirds turn out to help wounded Boomer A flock of waterbirds came out of nowhere to help the (toy) soldier Boomer return to action. (Credit: Rescue of Boomer) A rescued soldier was given the needed medical attention he needed after a flock of water birds showed up to help out. Last Thursday, Boomer was abandoned on the streets of San Francisco in critical condition after being hit by a car. After witnessing the accident, which was a hit and run, a pigeon flew down and brought a message from a nearby priest to the driver of the car, asking him to come back and pick up Boomer. The pigeon told the driver that Boomer was at St. Francis Cabrini Church and needed to be rescued. The driver picked up Boomer, took him to St. Francis Cabrini Church where he was met by the parish priest. He said that the pigeon dropped off the message while flying over the car and apparently ignored the priest's pleas to let Boomer go. Boomer had to be taken for a check up at the animal hospital, where the priest heard about the accident, and then to the UC Davis Medical Center. While Boomer was having his wounds tended, a group of water birds was outside. The waterfowl were enjoying the pond that Boomer was in, and decided to come over to investigate a possible distress signal. At first they were hesitant to come near Boomer, but once they realized it was just a puppy and not a bird, they came over and started helping the little fellow. They were very gentle with him, walking around him and apparently liked the feel of his fur. The birds led a pack of volunteers that were there with Boomer and took him to the vet. Boomer was also given a check-up, and the doctor said that he can go home after a week of treatment. The water birds stayed around to clean up Boomer's wounds and enjoyed the picnic with him. Boomer's parents were at the vet's office and were asked if they would like to adopt the little fella. They said they would love to, but that there are 2 other puppies waiting for the same opportunity, so the only thing they could do was to take care of Boomer.
